Verse #7

Until the final battle is won...

Since the 1950s, many believe the United States has experienced a spiritual decline. The 2025 election has highlighted these changes. It's time for Christian leaders to step up and guide people in a way that reflects Christ's teachings.

By participating in the awareness of Good vs. Evil, leaders can inspire others to live out their faith in everyday actions. They can foster a sense of community, encourage moral integrity, and promote compassion and justice. Through their example, they can help bring about positive change and spiritual renewal in the nation.

I have included below an excerpt from my next booklet and hope brothers it is not offensive but hope we might think how we can include the thinking in our meetings?

Faith and Politics' (allegory)

In a small town, a group of Christian men had been meeting every week for years. They shared their faith, supported each other, and discussed various faith topics. One day, the topic of politics came up after an election. Most of the men agreed on certain views, but one, had a different perspective. The discussion quickly became uncomfortable, and to avoid conflict, the group shut down the conversation.

As time went on, the country faced significant challenges and opportunities for growth. The men in the group saw the potential for greatness but were hesitant to engage in discussions that might lead to disputes. They valued their unity and friendship, but this avoidance of political discourse left them disconnected from the broader societal changes.

One day, they suggested they find a way to discuss politics without letting it divide them. The men proposed they focus on the common good and shared values, rather than their differences. The group agreed to give it a try. They set ground rules for respectful dialogue and committed to listening to each other with open hearts and minds.

Through these conversations, the men discovered that while they had different opinions, they all wanted the best for their community and country. They found common ground in their faith and shared values, which allowed them to contribute to the greatness of their nation without sacrificing their unity.

In the end, the group grew stronger, not just in their faith, but in their ability to engage in meaningful and respectful discussions. They realized that their differences could be a source of strength, and that by working together, they could make a positive impact on their country. The end.

Faith and Politics' (poem)

In the battle of Good vs. Evil, they stand tall, Leaders of faith, answering the call. Inspire others, in actions so true, Reflecting Christ in all that they do.

Fostering community, hearts intertwined, Encouraging integrity, in every mind. Promoting compassion, justice for all, Through their example, they heed the call.

Bringing change, both positive and bright, Spiritual renewal, a guiding light. In the movement of Good vs. Evil, they lead, Planting the seeds of faith, in every deed.

With courage unwavering, they march on, Faithful soldiers, from dusk till dawn. Their light shines in the darkest night, Guiding the lost, toward the light.

In unity, they stand as one, Until the final battle is won.
For in their hearts, they know it's true, with faith and love, they'll see it through.

Together they rise, with voices clear, Proclaiming the truth, casting out fear. In the name of Christ, they take their stand, Bringing hope and peace to every land.

Until the final battle is won (allegory)

In the quaint town of Harmony, a group of devoted Christian men had been meeting faithfully every week for over two years. They gathered in a cozy little church, sharing their faith, supporting each other through life's ups and downs, and discussing various topics. Their bond was strong, and their commitment to their faith was unwavering.

One evening, as the group settled into their usual seats, the topic of politics unexpectedly surfaced. The upcoming election had everyone on edge, and the men found themselves divided on various issues. John, a passionate member of the group, held views that were different from the majority. As the discussion grew heated, tensions rose, and to preserve their unity, the group decided to shut down the conversation.

Despite their best intentions, the avoidance of political discourse left a lingering sense of disconnection. The country was facing significant challenges, and the men could see the potential for greatness, but they hesitated to engage in discussions that might lead to disputes.

Weeks turned into months, and the group continued to meet, but the unspoken tension remained. One day, John approached the group with a new idea. He suggested that they find a way to discuss politics without letting it divide them. "We can focus on the common good and our shared values," he proposed, "rather than our differences."

The group agreed to give it a try. They established ground rules for respectful dialogue and committed to listening to each other with open hearts and minds. They prayed for wisdom and guidance, asking for the strength to put their faith into action in a way that reflected Christ's teachings.

As they began their new approach to discussions, something remarkable happened. The men discovered that while they had different opinions, they all wanted the best for their community and country. They found common ground in their faith and shared values, which allowed them to contribute to the greatness of their nation without sacrificing their unity.

Their conversations became more meaningful and respectful, and the group grew stronger. They realized that their differences could be a source of strength and that by working together, they could make a positive impact on their country. Inspired by their renewed sense of purpose, they decided to take their message beyond their small group.

The men organized community events, bringing people together to discuss important issues and find solutions that benefited everyone. They volunteered their time and resources to support local initiatives, always striving to reflect Christ in their actions. Their efforts did not go unnoticed, and soon, their town became a shining example of what could be achieved when people of faith united for the common good.

In the end, the group of Christian men not only strengthened their own bond but also brought about positive change in their community. They learned that through faith, respect, and a commitment to shared values, they could overcome any challenge and make a lasting impact on the world around them. The end.

Christianity is Distracted on fringe realities

When it is said "Christianity is distracted on fringe realities," they are likely suggesting that some Christians or Christian communities are focusing too much on less important or peripheral issues, rather than on the core spiritual teachings and mission of their faith.

These "fringe realities" could be controversial or sensational topics that, while interesting or attention-grabbing, might not be central to the fundamental principles of faith and Christianity, such as love, compassion, forgiveness, and service to others. This distraction can lead to divisions, misunderstandings, and a lack of progress on more significant spiritual and societal matters.

In essence, it's a call to refocus on the essential aspects of the faith and to prioritize actions and discussions that align more closely with the core values and teachings of Christianity.

a few ways Christians can avoid distractions and refocus on the core teachings of their faith:

1. Emphasize Core Values: Prioritize teachings like love, compassion, forgiveness, and service. These principles are central to Christianity and should guide actions and discussions.
2. Focus on Scripture: Spend time studying the Bible and reflecting on its messages. This can help Christians stay grounded in their faith and avoid getting caught up in less important issues.
3. Engage in Meaningful Dialogue: Foster open, respectful conversations about faith and its application in daily life. Avoiding divisive or sensational topics can help maintain unity and focus.

4. Serve Others: Actively participate in community service and charitable activities. This aligns with Christ's teachings and can help Christians make a positive impact.
5. Reflect and Pray: Regular prayer and self-reflection can help Christians stay connected to their faith and seek guidance from the supernatural connection on what truly matters.
6. Seek Spiritual Guidance: Lean on spiritual leaders and mentors for advice and support. They can provide valuable insights and help Christians navigate their faith journey.

Christians can avoid being distracted by fringe realities and stay true to the core teachings of their faith.

One example of a fringe distraction is the focus on specific conspiracy theories. Some individuals or groups may become preoccupied with uncovering hidden agendas or sensational stories that are not rooted in factual evidence or aligned with the core teachings of Christianity. This can lead to fear, division, and a diversion from the essential principles of faith, such as love, compassion, and serving others. By refocusing on the central tenets of their faith, Christians can avoid these distractions and strengthen their spiritual journey.

Fringe distractions can indeed arise from Bible studies. Here are a few ways this might happen:

1. Overemphasis on Minor Details: Spending too much time on obscure or less relevant parts of the text can detract from the central messages and teachings of the Bible.

2. Doctrinal Disputes: Heated arguments over specific interpretations can create division and distraction, rather than fostering understanding and unity.
3. Personal Agendas: When individuals bring their own biases and personal issues into the study, it can derail the focus from learning and spiritual growth.
4. Speculative Topics: Engaging excessively in speculative or sensational topics that are not central to the faith can distract from the core principles and teachings.
5. Avoiding Practical Application: Focusing solely on theoretical discussions without considering how the teachings apply to daily life can limit the study's impact.

To avoid these distractions, it's important to keep the focus on the central messages of the Bible, encourage respectful and open dialogue, and ensure that the teachings are applied to daily life. This way, Bible studies can remain meaningful and enriching experiences.

LOVE defined

Imagine a feeling that transcends words and definitions, an invisible thread that ties hearts together. It's as if the divine presence of God breathes life into this force, infusing it with unconditional grace and infinite mercy. Picture the warmth of a heartfelt embrace, the spark in someone's eyes that lights up when they see you, and the unspoken understanding that flows effortlessly between kindred spirits, all guided by God's love.

It's the quiet comfort of knowing someone is always there for you, the joy in shared laughter, and the gentle support in times of sorrow, all reflections of God's unwavering care. Love is the melody that plays in the background of our lives, sometimes loud and vibrant, other times soft and soothing, with God's love as the composer.

This divine love is the reason behind countless acts of kindness, the driving force that inspires us to be our best selves, and the glue that holds relationships together. It turns ordinary moments into cherished memories and gives life its deepest meaning. In essence, love, with God at its center, is the invisible yet powerful force that shapes our experiences and connections, making life more beautiful and meaningful.

Born within, (poem)

*In hypocritical guise, flattery's veil, Empty words of forgiveness avail. True children are not outwardly made, but born within,
where sin's debts are paid.*

*If we claim Christ's ransom for sin, yet do not die to sin within,
Our comfort's false, a vain pretense, Without new obedience,
there's no defense.*

The enemy of sin, fierce and strong, finds solace in Christ's suffering long. Hating sin, with all his might, In Christ's spirit, he seeks what's right.

Outward shows, mere empty claims, can't mask the soul's internal flames. True children shine from inner light, Reflecting Christ in actions bright.

If the soul's eye be light and clear, the body follows, shining near. Boasting faith while sin does burn, Shows darkness, with no hope in turn.

With sincere love, earnest and true, One's actions reveal the inner view. Only those reborn anew, See God's kingdom, pure and true.

*For fire within brings light to all, God's divine will, our true call.
In the mind where His fire stays, God's will be done through our days.*

This poem highlights the difference between superficial faith and genuine inner transformation. Here's a line-by-line explanation to capture its essence:

Stanza 1:

In hypocritical guise, flattery's veil, Empty words of forgiveness
avail. True children are not outwardly made, but born within,
where sin's debts are paid.

- Hypocrisy and flattery are useless without genuine inner change. True followers of God are not defined by outward appearances but by inner transformation, where they genuinely confront and overcome sin.

Stanza 2:

*If we claim Christ's ransom for sin, yet do not die to sin within,
Our comfort's false, a vain pretense, Without new obedience,
there's no defense.*

- Merely claiming Christ's sacrifice isn't enough. We must genuinely turn away from sin and live in new obedience. Otherwise, any comfort we take in Christ's sacrifice is false and meaningless.

Stanza 3:

The enemy of sin, fierce and strong, Finds solace in Christ's suffering long. Hating sin, with all his might, In Christ's spirit, he seeks what's right.

- Those who truly hate sin find comfort in Christ's suffering and strive to live according to Christ's teachings, showing they are His true disciples.

Stanza 4:

Outward shows, mere empty claims, can't mask the soul's internal flames. True children shine from inner light, Reflecting Christ in actions bright.

- Outward displays of faith cannot hide an inner life still struggling with sin. True believers shine from within, reflecting Christ through their actions.

Stanza 5:

If the soul's eye be light and clear, the body follows, shining near. Boasting faith while sin does burn, Shows darkness, with no hope in turn.

- If the soul is pure, this purity will be reflected in one's actions. Boasting about faith while living in sin reveals inner darkness and hopelessness.

Stanza 6:

With sincere love, earnest and true, One's actions reveal the inner view. Only those reborn anew, See God's kingdom, pure and true.

- Genuine love and sincere intentions are shown through actions. Only those who experience true inner rebirth can enter God's kingdom.

Stanza 7:

For fire within brings light to all, God's divine will, our true call. In the mind where His fire stays, God's will be done through our days.

- The divine fire within brings light to one's life, guiding actions according to God's will. When God's presence is within our minds, His will is naturally carried out in our lives.

Overall, the poem emphasizes that true transformation and becoming a child of God require genuine inner change, sincere repentance, and living a life that reflects Christ's teachings. Outward appearances and empty claims are meaningless without real inner transformation.

The authors prayer for YOU: (poem)

In each word and line, I weave, A prayer for hearts that will receive. May light within each soul ignite, dispelling shadows with its might.

May those who read find inner peace, in Christ's embrace, may worries cease. With every verse, may faith renew, and guide them on a path that's true.

Let hypocritical veils fall away, revealing truth in bright array. May each soul seek and truly find, God's will and peace within the mind.

For those who struggle, lost in night, may my words bring hope and light. through Christ's love, let hearts be healed, and God's pure grace be revealed.

In the silent whispers of each prayer, May readers feel God's tender care. with sincere love and faith profound, may they in His grace be found.

May God's divine fire burn within, cleansing hearts from every sin. Through each line, let His will be shown, and guide each soul to His throne.

This is my prayer, my humble plea, for all who read these words from me. May they be blessed, renewed, and free, In God's love, eternally.

IT'S ALL ABOUT YOU
